Ryan Pinckney is an intellectual property and patent trial lawyer with 15 years of experience handling complex patent litigation from complaint to trial. He has helped clients in cases involving computer graphics, home appliances, HVAC equipment and controls, and many other areas.

In addition to his work before the International Trade Commission, Mr. Pinckney also has extensive experience in patent litigation in federal district courts across Texas, New Jersey, Massachusetts, Minnesota, and North Carolina.

A graduate of Harvard Law School, Mr. Pinckney previously worked in the intellectual property group at the AmLaw 100 firm Baker Botts and the patent litigation boutique Antonelli, Harrington & Thompson.

As part of his effort to help the community, Mr. Pinckney has tried over a dozen cases as a volunteer prosecutor for the City of Houston.

Prior to attending law school, he graduated magna cum laude with a Bachelor of Science in Computer Engineering from Clemson University, where he also participated in the co-op program, working every other semester at Siemens Information and Communication Networks in Boca Raton, Florida.
